Miss Cast Broke the 2,000-Mile Record Handily.

Will Brown in January.

Miss Marguerite Gast isn't satisfied with her world's record ride of 2,000 miles, which she finished last night She wants to add 500 or possibly miles to her mark.

With this end in view she resumed her journey at 2 o'clock this morning, paced by Lottie Brandon, the century champion, and up to 7 o'clock had covered fifty miles. She then dismounted for breakfast, after which she started out to complete the other half of her century.

After completing the two thousandth mile last night Miss Gast retired about 9 o'clock and was called at 2.25 this morning. She appeared much refreshed by the sleep and said she felt able to ride 1,500 miles longer if her trainers would allow her.

In finishing her 2,000-mile ride, Miss Gast beat even the record for men. cutting off two hours from Will H. Brown's time. He was the former world's champion, but last night lowered his colors. The record will still be in the family, however, if unbroken, for Brown and Miss Gast are to be married next January.

Strange and startling facts have been admitted by Brown, who trained Miss Gast, regarding her ride. He frankly admits that it was not her own physical stamina that won the race for her.

Strychnine Beat Record. Strychnine and love were the subtl combination that enabled the young woman blevelist to do what no other woman or man has ever done in the way of endurance. But it was not Margaret Gast who ended the terrible 2,000-mile ride on the Long Island roads last night. It was an automaton. No gleam of intelligence was seen in the eyes of the woman rider. No words came from her lips. Marguerite Gust was sleeping, but her physical frame had pedalled along tirelessly and automatically on the last fifty miles of her awful journey. Lave began this ride. Miss Gast wanted to please her sweetheart.

Love Showed the Way. Eighteen months ago Miss Gast learned created a woman's 1,600-mile road recrecord and went 500 miles further.

Last Saturday week Miss Gast began her trial to lower Mrs. Lindsay's tri-umphant colors and to raise her own at the 2,000-mile post. She, or rather the automaton she changed to, succeed-the task her love set for her until to-

Then the noxious poleons will have dissipated and Marguerite Gast may per-haps be herself once more. One thounine hundred and twenty-five miles had been put to the bicyclist's credit at 1.06 o'clock yesterday afternoon. A half hour later a stop was made at West's Hotel in Valley Stream.

Will Brown ran to the machine ridden by his sweetheart. He caught the girl in his arms and iffted her to the ground. Hardly a look of recognition greeted the trainer as he led his charge away. Her feet rose alternately in a half-circle, as if she were yet at her task.

Seated in "The Ranch," as the train-ing quarters are called, the little woman drank greedily a bowl of hot lemonade; at the bottom was a whitish sediment. It was quintre.
"Drink it, dear," said Brown, and the automation drank. The woman was feverish and the quintre was to allay ther Hesty Meni.

A bit of rare beef and rice pudding were put before her. In a trice all had disappeared. The allotted thirty minutes for rest were gone and with Will Hrown's arms about her the record-breaker was let on her wheel and once more started on that terrible triangle. But Marguerite Gast did not know it. For over 116 hours she had been on her bicycle, and since last Wednesday, day and night, rainstorms and sunshine, have been all the same to her. Will Brown, her sweetheart trainer, admitted it this morning.

"Margy has no more idea that she has ridden 2,000 miles than if it were 20." he said. "I doubt if she knows she has been riding at all.

"In fact, I truly believe she has not a singlis idea about anything as yet. She never would have been able to keep up this ride if it were not for the stimulants. In heave given her. Strychnize, arsenic, morphine and quinine are the drugs I used. They are harmless in such quantities as I administered, but they act on the nerves and brain so that the physical part of the riding was purely mechanical.

"I tried them all on myself when I made my record ride, and I found them beneficial. I believe I could have sent Miss Gast on for another 1,000 miles when she finished her own stunt last night, and that she would end 2,000 miles she started. The trouble with her was that at first I save her no stimulants. She wanted to make the ride, but I thought she would back out when the had weather came. She didn't know she was taking anything to keep her up. In a bottle of ale, a dish of soup, coffee or anything, I would put in the stimulant she seemed to be needing. I sid not use tocalne. That would poison her. Nor did I use a hypochermic neede. I gave powders and llouids internally. "Up to Wednesday Miss Gast had lost ten pounds of flesh from her 126. She had gained one back last night, but if she does another 1,000 miles now I think she will be again at par."

Secret of Her Ride.

This is the secret of the little woman's

Secret of Her Ride.

This is the secret of the little woman's ride. It was pluck that started it and poison has ended it. There is a State it was against "doping" race horses, but none evidently against doing the same to human beings. Miss Gast, the automaton, looked better last night than four days ago. There is no denying that Trainer Brown's recipe for endurance fills the bill. But as to after effect, were shaky. But there that Trainer Brown's recipe for endurance fills the bill. But as to after effect, in Miss Gast's case there can be only conjecture. In Brown's case, he was not hurt nor was his health impaired. Sitting steadily, with just a little bear of forward, the automatic woman rider rolled into Valley Stream again at 250 o'clock yesterday afternoon with the record at 1,800 miles. The rider's eyes were set behind her goggles of Isinglass, were sated that several contents of the contents

Rafnaland,

By William H. Wilson.

The story of a balloon incident, in which the hero is carried to the North Pole. There he finds the inhabitants direct descendants of the Norse Vikings. He becomes enamored of the King's daughter, who is loved by a rival King. This situation furnishes the action for the plot, which is thrilling and interesting.
